the programme

Under the programme, 550 new entrants of the BUET will conduct a six-month course to impart literacy on at least 5,500 unlettered persons in their areas.

Each student will teach at least 100 illiterate persons giving lessons for two hours every day. A committee of local leaders will be formed to assist and supervise implementation of the programme at the local level.

Officials of the mass literacy programme will organise a one-day briefing session for the students who will take part in the programme during the 13 months of pre-session lay-off forced by session-jam. They will be given all the necessary educational appliances at the end of the briefing for use during the literacy programme.

The students will submit a report on the progress of the course every three months.

A committee, consisting of the Vice-Chancellor of BUET, concerned teachers and top level officials, will submit a full report after considering the progress reports submitted by the students.

The voluntary programme, a unique venture, is expected to bring about a revolution in spreading literacy all over the country, a press release of the Primary and Mass Education department of the government said on Monday.
