Admission problem in schools

In my observation I have noted one point which certainly is one of the causes— if not the main one, that gives a 'bad name' to a School. There are Schools which promote students to a higher class even though they have failed in as many as three, four or five subjects including some important subjects like English and Bengali. A Boys' High School at Shudheswarj is noted for this to all those Guardians who care.

An old saying reads: 'Little learning is a dangerous thing.' It is needless to say that we often ignore this fact and avoid taking the needful steps to improve the learning of the underdeveloped minds.

The letter of an 'observer' under the above caption (d).

18th December 1983) has thoughtfully explained the problems we face today and which require to be solved immediately, for the better future of the nation. Students studying in various schools fail to get admission in the reputed schools, as has been pointed out by 'he writer'.

There is no doubt that there are schools with bad names and for obvious reasons guardians do not wish to send their children to those schools. But the question is—what caused these schools to get the unwanted reputation?

It is about time that we did something to improve the standard of teaching in schools and train up the children accordingly.
