Milon said the issues related to teachers' salaries and allowances, pension, leave, transfer, training and higher education must be settled quickly within the stipulated timeframe.

He laid special emphasis on introducing automation and modern methods to make the service delivery process easier and faster.

To end the culture of lobbying in transfers and ensure transparency, he directed authorities to take necessary measures to conduct transfer activities through artificial intelligence-based software.

The education minister said a digital system would be developed in the future so that service seekers could easily find information about the relevant desk or official according to the nature of their problems.

Speaking about the internal environment of the administration, the minister told the officials that more effective working environment must be created through proper coordination in government work, open discussion and mutual cooperation.

Unnecessary distance within the administration should be reduced to build a cooperative atmosphere so that the pace and quality of services in the education sector increase, he added.
