System Loss In Education Sector

Sir,
All of us are highly concerned about system loss in the power sector. The higher echelon of the Power Ministry gives directives from time to time to reduce the system loss of electricity. But alas! We are hardly concerned about the system loss in our education sector.

Higher education in our country is the worst victim of system loss. Three or four years' course here normally takes seven to eight years to complete. This process starts at the beginning of higher studies when a student has to wait for one long year to start his course after passing the H.S.C.

The least we say about our universities, the better. At present Shahjalal University and Chittagong University have remained closed for four long months over the naming of student dormitories and brutal killing of two students respectively. No same person in a developed and civilised country can imagine such closure of a university for such a long time over a trifling matter.

I believe that government is not serious about the solution of the student unrest in any university when any of its political issue is in any way connected with it. It is time we gave a reasonable attention to the Honourable President's suggestion and appeal for stopping student politics.
