Primary Education Fortnight begins tomorrow

The National Primary Education Fortnight begins tomorrow (Wednesday) with a view to creating awareness about primary education to eradicate illiteracy by the next 10 years, reports UNB.

Elaborate programmes, including discussion meetings, and cultural functions and competitions, have been chalked out to observe the fortnight across the country.

On the inaugural day, meetings will be arranged with the guardians, ward members and commissioners and local people to make them aware about the annual activities of the primary schools.

The distribution of books among students for the new academic year will also begin on the day, said a PID handout on Monday.

Besides, different government offices and places in thana headquarters will be decorated with banners, festoons and posters while rallies will be arranged with the participation of patrons of education, guardians and teachers.
