The President said the principal objective of learning was to acquire knowledge and build up a strong character. He said if a student graduating from a university is devoid of these qualities, then the whole objectivity of education becomes meaningless.

He said the education sector of the country was being given the highest allocation in the national budget. But, he said, bulk of the budget allocation was being spent for constructing buildings, procuring educational inputs and paying salary to the teachers. As a result, he observed, the primary objective of such allocation to produce educated workforce with strong character was not being attained.
