

Moeen praises cadet college education system

Army Chief General Moeen U Ahmed Monday praised the country's cadet college education system saying that cadet students are genius, reports UNB.

Speaking at a seminar titled 'Celebrating 50 years of Cadet College Education: A Legacy of Learning', he cited an American Professor's comment that only two percent people of the total population are genius and "We have to identify the genius."

Praising the cadet college education system, General Moeen said Cadet College is one of institutions where one can identify the genius people.

He said ex-cadets are not only making contributions to the Armed Forces, but also to other areas like bureaucracy, engineering and medical science.

The Army Chief said there are 11 cadet colleges, including three for women, in the country. "If Cadet College can be established in each district, more meritorious students will get opportunity to better study and the country will have more genius who will make significant contributions to the nation's economic development."
